Owner said dog has possible dermatitis. Low blood count

06/04/16 18:39 when this dog was brought to me earlier, I was told she had masses. I could palpate no masses. body condition score 5/5 (obese- 3/5 is ideal), marked dander, mucus membranes pink, CRT < 2 sec. not sure what blood parameter is low- perhaps she has hypothyroidism? $$$ to diagnose, $$/ month to treat. Dogs live well with this condition when under treatment as lack of medication in a lab can result in heart disease.

06/07/16 13:35 ABeltran- The dog fence fought with dog's in H-building and in the outside sections of G and F buildings. During Sensitivity assessment the dog was active and focused on the Assessor and all available stimuli. The Dog was soft in eye and body but moved his legs/body so that the Assessor was unable to hold his front paws for Squeeze assessment. When the Assessor used the rear paw the dog head flipped while moving his paw away. The dog approached a female dog with body soft, tail well above spine level, ears forward. When a male dog approached this dog rushed in with tail up, eyes hard, ears back. He then snapped at the male dog.

05/24/16 15:32 per HALO possible dental disease

05/24/16 17:20 BAR; unable to look at oral cavity. (kennel mate has grade 2/4 periodontal disease. No cage cards on window or collars on cats).
sottman

05/25/16 08:13 Kennel mate's dental tartar have no relevance to this cat's dental tartar. This cat has SEVERE dental tartar- grade 5/5, Periodontal disease grade 3-4/4. Teeth are so caked with tartar that cannot visualize how receded the gums are, but suspect very receded. Missing all incisors, lower canines- severe gingival recession. Cat doesn't look old, but cannot assess age based on teeth in this case. Cat will need many extractions, most teeth will come out easily and could be done if cat is spayed at MCACC. If already spayed, then will need dental at FSV. Underlying FeLV/FIV should be ruled out. LEFT EYE: empty socket. no discharge, old injury and ruptured globe likely. Surgery not necessary, would only serve cosmetic purposes. Cat was very tolerant of exam. nmayer
